

Frequently Asked Questions
Broker and customer participation in
USA Compression Partners Distribution Reinvestment Plan

DTC book entry participants (brokers and their customers) have requested information as to how they can participate in USA Compression Partners (NYSE:USAC) Distribution Reinvestment Plan. This Frequently Asked Questions Sheet is designed to answer those questions.

Are brokers and their customers entitled to participate in USAC's Distribution Reinvestment Plan (the "DRIP") directly through the DTC book entry system?

Yes, brokers and their customers may now participate directly in the USAC DRIP, in accordance with an agreement between USAC and Wells Fargo, its transfer agent, and a separate agreement between Wells Fargo and the Depository Trust Company ("DTC"). In DTC terminology, the USAC common unit CUI SP is now on the "DRIP Table" which allows all brokers to participate. Each broker (through its back office) would elect the number of USAC common units that are to be reinvested.

Do customers need to withdraw their USAC common units from their brokerage accounts in order to participate in the DRIP?

No, the system (as applied to participating brokers) is set up to recognize participating units with their broker's DTC book entry account.

How should customers have their USAC common units participate in the DRIP?

Customers should call their brokers. Each broker will have its own customer procedures to be followed.

How should brokers have their customers' USAC common units made eligible for the DRIP?

Our transfer agent has informed us that brokers may wish to reach out to their DTC contact if they have any questions.
